obvious reasons, only they would have been able to decide what SRD's (Small Range Devices) might be a threat and what to do about it."

Drunk Nude Woman in Petrol Buying Shocker

Police were called to a German gas station after a naked 38 year-old woman drove up and asked to be filled up.

The station manager, Jan Matthausen said, "I was surprised when I saw a car drive onto the forecourt beeping its horn and flashing its lights to get my attention."

"I went out and saw this woman, completely naked, sitting behind the wheel.

"She wound down the window, leaned out and asked me to fill up her tank. I called the police straight away."

Police later breathalysed the woman and found her to be seven times over the drink-drive limit.

YouTube Used to Catch Thieves

Two teenage thieves who robbed a store in Grieskirchen, Austria, were later caught in Linz after being recognised when CCTV footage from the store was put on the internet website, YouTube.

The two teenager asylum seekers from Georgia and Armenia were recorded stealing a $2000 laptop. The video shows how one of the pair kept watch and covered what his pal was doing as the second teenager slipped the computer under his jacket.

The store owner, Thomas Karer, had only recently installed the surveillance gear after a spate of thefts at his store.

Imaginary Drug Squad Chase Man Up Tree

Police in St. Cloud, Minnesota were called by a 30 year-old man up a tree with his mobile phone after the drug squad allegedly chased him there.

and quickly realised that he was under the influence of drugs and in fact hallucinating.

They tried to talk him down, but he lost his grip and fell out of the tree.

He was taken to hospital but found to be uninjured, whereupon he was taken to jail.

Pet Computers

A Los Angeles inventor has come up with a Compubeaver. Kasey McMahan, 34, spent 3 months building a computer into a real (dead) beaver. She said, "I started thinking about the most ridiculous thing to put a computer into and decided it had to be a beaver."

"It looks at how nature relates to technology."

The beaver was apparently purchased already dead and stuffed. Once she removed the foam insides with an electric kitchen knife, she was able cut space for the computer tower, and reinforce it with fibreglass.

Two more US inventors, biologist Christy Canida and environmental studies graduate Noah Weinsrein came up with a real computer 'mouse'. After purchasing a dead rodent from a local pet shop, they made a computer mouse housed in a real mouse.
